

MOTORCYCLE PRESCRIBED FOR THIN-BLOODED FOLKS

Fresh air—plenty of it—and a moderate amount of exercise, have always been recognized as the most powerful agencies for good health, but to most people a doctor's prescription for either of these cures or preventives would seem to be wholly unnecessary. There is, however, one New York physician who feels that best results are obtained only when fresh air and exercise are administered in correct proportions. Hence he prescribes for his patients suffering through lack of open-air exercise, "a motorcycle to be used daily throughout the year."

Speaking of the motorcycle and the benefits accruing from its use, Dr. F. W. Abel says:
"The chief virtue of the motorcycle and one of my reasons for prescribing its use is that it necessitates that the user indulge in a certain amount of exercise involving practically every muscle in the human frame, yet the exercise is not so vigorous nor is it so localized as to nullify the good effects which come of moderate but systematic exertion."

ROCHESTER, N. Y., POLICE
START MOTORCYCLE SQUAD

Ever intent on increasing the efficiency of their traffic squad, the Rochester, N. Y., police department has just added six Harley-Davidson motorcycles to the equipment. Each of the machines is equipped with a standard sidecar chassis upon which is fitted a special body designed by Deputy Chief of Police Zimmerman. It is a roomy box affair about 54x40 inches and 15 inches deep, in which is carried all the latest first aid equipment, including the pulmotor.

The most improved apparatus for pulling disabled automobiles from the mud and ditches is also carried. There is also provided space in which the officer may carry his rain coat, report books, etc.

The cover of the box is fitted with hinges and a cabinet lock so that it may be closed and locked when carrying valuable articles. The top of the cover is fitted with a thick leather cushion surrounded by a neat nickel plated railing for carrying an extra passenger. There is also a compact folding footboard at the bottom of the front end, which makes the sidecar comfortable to ride in. The other six machines they now have in service will be equipped with similar sidecars.

LINES ON A POPULAR FUEL.

"There's bound to be a shortage soon in gas,"
The King of Oil Producers gravely said.
His face was seamed with grief, as for the dead.
"And marked increase in price must come to pass."
The ten reporters heard the magnate's views;
"Shortage in Gasoline. Price Is to Rise.
A Million Gallons Short Is the Surmise"—
Thus was it captioned in the evening news.

That night, at billiards with his chief of staff,
The Oil King ran a string of forty-two,
And then, the while he rested on his cue,
He burst into a hearty, ringing laugh.
His shrewd eyes closed, his lips moved once or twice.
"Of course, we'll hold the market for a while;
Then, Jim—" he paused, "we'll make another pile,
Swearing we could no longer hold the price."

But to his office ere a week had passed
A rumor came, of grisly, fearful mien
Like some forgotten sin to one unclean,
And on its face a furtive look he cast.
The magnate's throat grew dry with sudden thirst.
He saw his system, rotten to the core,
Exposed before the vicious lust of war.
And futile fury swept him and he cursed.

"Please take a letter," said the King of Oil.
"Bureau of Mines. Dear Sirs: I note that you
Say gasoline is short. This is untrue.
Only at great expense, hardship, and toil
Are new wells drilled. We find we can produce
Plenty of gas for cars throughout the land
And war needs, too, if price and the demand
Do not fall off through its restricted use."

"Acting as a member of the Council of National Defense,
Frank G. Ryan, of Parke, Davis & Company, Detroit, has purchased the entire available supply of castor oil. The product is used in lubricating aeroplanes, for which purpose it is necessary."
Thus a trade publication announces the emancipation of the children of the nation. All the little boys and girls in our vicinity played hookey today and revelled in their freedom.
And the journal which published the glad tidings is, would you believe it?—Standard Remedies.

Motorists, otherwise careful, men who neither beat their wives nor sleep on the front lawn in the rain, men who visit their physicians because of slight colds and pay their insurance premiums promptly, are notoriously thoughtless with their motor cars.

We have prated columns of advice calculated to save them time and money. We have cautioned and suggested, criticised and warned them against the expensive habits of which they are guilty in the care and driving of their cars.

We propose no lengthy advice now.
Our present thought is a matter of life insurance.
ESPECIALLY in private garages—DON'T run your engine with the doors and windows closed. The SMELL may not be objectionable, BUT CARBON-MONOXIDE HAS NO APPRECIABLE ODOR.

With which remarks we conclude.
Those motorists who have read our warning will now promptly forget it.
And some morning, provided they are sufficiently prominent in public life, we will read about them on the front page.

WARNING.

Chauffeur, you who drive up in the morning,
Back of this here poet's two-room flat—
Long before the daytime comes aborning,
Some time after 2 o'clock, at that,
Listen to this message—get this earful:
I don't mind your cutout in the day,
But at night the noise is something fearful;
Cease—or have a doctor's bill to pay.

Mister, I'm a peaceful sort of geezer,
Not one that's prone to kicking, as a rule;
Me, I'm next to Winter, as a freezer—
Quiet, unruffled, calm, collected, cool—
But whenas you drive up in our alley
Early of mornings, muffle your exhaust;
Otherwise you beckon your finale,
Taunting a gink who doesn't count the cost.

Flower pots, bottles, bricks of hefty sizes
Wait at the bedroom window of my home;
And some night when your clamor tantalizes
All of that stuff I'll drop upon your dome.
Sleep? Who mentioned sleep? Where'er they land me
I'll sleep like any bollermaker's clerk.
Your noise at 2, please don't misunderstand me,
Disturbs my labor on the morrow's work.

"What has become of the archaic notion that Benning track and Irving Barber constituted an automobile race?" queries G. A. M.

Probably it is one with the idea, once prevalent, that when a car was not performing well, something was wrong with the carburetor.
